AI for Communication: Parent Messages, Translation, and Tone

A 45–60 minute, self-facilitated session: every teacher drafts their next real family message, starts a weekly positive-note habit, and builds a translation access plan. Run by your own coach; no consultant required.

THE STANCE, AND YOUR PARENT ANSWER

AI drafts; teachers review, personalize, and send. Families hear the teacher, not the tool.
Sensitive news is always delivered personally, by voice, and official documents travel district translation channels.

Why this matters now

Family communication is the highest-leverage, least-resourced work in the building: one individualized sentence home per week cut course-credit failure by 41% (Kraft & Rogers, 2015), yet it lives in the unpaid margins of a ~54-hour week (Merrimack/EdWeek, 2022). And 5.3 million U.S. students are English learners (NCES) whose families federal guidance requires reaching in a language they understand (ED/DOJ, 2015).

What your staff will be able to do afterward

- Draft family messages in minutes with a four-part prompt, then pass every draft through voice and readability checks
- Run a weekly positive-note batch: AI-drafted starters, teacher-personalized sends
- Repair tone safely: "warmer, shorter, plainer," the read-aloud test, the 24-hour rule
- Use AI translation responsibly: plain language first, district channels for official documents, human check when stakes rise
- State the human-only list cold: safety, discipline, grief, and IEP news travel by voice
- Keep the privacy rule: situations, never student identities, go into public tools
